

Social Responsibility

Does Neurogenesis offer pro-bono programs for at-risk populations?

Yes, Neurogenesis is deeply committed to social responsibility and offers pro-bono programs for youth from at-risk or vulnerable populations. These initiatives support individuals from families facing significant challenges such as mental health conditions, chronic illnesses, or other adversities, including depression, addiction, cancer, obesity, diabetes, and more.

Our mission is to equip these individuals with the tools, guidance, and support needed to overcome obstacles, foster resilience, and establish a foundation for a healthier and more positive future. If you or someone you know could benefit from this initiative, or if you are interested in collaborating to expand its reach, please contact us.

How does Neurogenesis contribute to its broader social mission?

At the core of our mission, Neurogenesis is dedicated to creating a broad positive impact. To achieve this, we allocate 20% of our profits to providing psychoeducation for young adults from socioeconomically disadvantaged backgrounds. This initiative equips participants with essential knowledge and skills to navigate challenges and improve their mental health and well-being.

If you are interested in learning more about our efforts or partnering with us to support these programs, we'd love to hear from you.
